These things thus marked & the poorer sort may spare, and yet finde provisions sufficient for supplying the want of these.

* Of which the poorer sort may spare to the greater part, if they can content themselves with water in the heat of summer, which is found by much experience to be as wholesome & healthfull as beere.

* Which for the poorer sort may be of blew Callico; these in Summer they use for bands.

As for bedding, and necessary vessels for kitchen uses, men may carry what they have; lesse serving the turne there than would give contentment here.

† According to the proportion of the house intended to be built.

Though for the more convenient and plentiful accommodation of each planter it were to be desired that they carried the provisions of victualls above said, if their estates would reach thereunto, yet they may (having meanes to take fish and fowle) live comfortably that want all the rest, Meale for bread onely excepted, which is the staffe of life.

Out of which take that which the poore may spare, having sufficient in that which the country affords for needfull sustentation of nature.

Remaines for their charge besides Transportation

Printed at London for FREDERICK CLIFTON. 1630.
